

Story: The Tortoise and the Floating Tree

One rainy day in the jungle, heavy rain caused the river to overflow. A huge tree was uprooted and swept into the river. Soon, it blocked the water's flow, flooding the burrows and nests of many animals. Everyone grew worried.

The monkey said:

"I can jump and swing, but I cannot move such a heavy tree."

The elephant tried with all his might, but even he couldn't drag the tree alone. The animals began to lose hope.

Then, a little tortoise stepped forward and said:

"We can solve this if we all work together."

The tortoise shared a clever plan. The elephant pulled the tree with his trunk, the monkeys tugged at its branches, the birds gave directions from above, and the tortoise redirected the water from underneath.

Slowly, the tree shifted to the riverbank, and the water flowed freely again. All the animals clapped and cheered with joy!

The elephant looked at the tortoise and said:

"You may be the smallest, but your wisdom and teamwork saved the whole jungle."

Moral of the Story

- True strength lies in unity and teamwork.
- Size doesn't matter—wisdom and kindness can solve big problems.
- Helping others always brings happiness.

