

☆☆ The Little Crab and the Shining Shell

Far beneath the waves, in the wide and colorful ocean, lived a tiny crab named Coco. Coco was the smallest crab in his family, and because of his size, the bigger crabs often overlooked him. Sometimes, Coco felt invisible.

One sunny afternoon, while wandering near the coral reef, Coco noticed something unusual. A seashell, brighter than all the others, was trapped between two sharp rocks.

*As Coco drew closer, he heard a faint whisper,
“Please help me. I can’t get out.”*

Coco tried with all his strength. He pushed, he pulled, but the shell wouldn’t budge. He felt weak and thought to himself, “I am too small. Maybe I should give up.”

But Coco’s heart was kind and brave. He refused to leave the shell trapped. Instead, he hurried to call his friends — a gentle starfish, a cheerful seahorse, and a small school of colorful fish.

Together, they pushed and tugged with all their strength. Finally — pop! The seashell slipped free from the rocks.

*Suddenly, it began to glow with golden light. The whole ocean around them sparkled. The seashell spoke,
“Because you helped me with kindness, I will now help you too.”*

From that day forward, the glowing shell guided lost sea creatures safely home. It lit up the darkest parts of the ocean, making the seabed a safer and happier place.

And little Coco, the smallest crab of all, became the greatest helper of the sea.
