

The Hidden Bridge

One evening, after school, three friends—Ayaan, Sara, and Bilal—decided to explore a small forest near their village. They wanted adventure before bedtime!

As they walked deeper, they heard a faint cry for help. It was coming from the other side of a broken stream. The wooden bridge was gone, and on the far bank, a little boy was stuck, scared and crying.

Sara said, “We can’t leave him alone. He needs us.”

Bilal was nervous. “But the stream is wide and fast. What if we fall?”

Ayaan thought for a moment. Then he said, “If we work together, we can make a rope bridge with those vines.”

The three friends pulled, tied, and helped each other until a safe path was made. One by one, they crossed and brought the little boy back.

The boy’s smile made them forget all their tiredness. They realized something important: real adventure is not about danger—it’s about courage and helping others.

That night, when they went to bed, they felt like true heroes.

Moral: Teamwork and kindness make even the toughest challenges easier.
