

The Brave Little Ant

In a green and cheerful garden called Blossom Vale, there lived a tiny ant named Ario. He was always curious and loved to explore new places. But the bigger insects often said, “You are too small to do anything important.”

One sunny afternoon, Ario was carrying a crumb back to his anthill when he saw the sky turning dark. A strong storm was coming! He hurried home to warn the other ants, but the older ants laughed and said, “Don’t worry, little one. We have seen storms before.”

Ario felt worried. He remembered a safe cave near the old oak tree. He tried to tell the others, but no one believed him.

So, Ario decided to act on his own. He rushed to the mouse family, the ladybug squad, and even the shy butterfly twins. One by one, he convinced them to follow him to the hidden cave.

Just in time! The wind blew hard, and heavy rain poured down. But inside the cave, all the little creatures were safe and warm — thanks to brave Ario.

When the storm was over, everyone cheered for him. From that day, no one in Blossom Vale ever called Ario “too small” again.

★ Moral of the Story:

No one is too small to make a big difference. Courage and quick thinking can save the day.